Jemma White Case Study

Updated 5 Nov 2015

In 2010 Jemma White was one of the first to join Greenergy's graduate recruitment programme.

The programme lasts approximately two and half years and sees recruits spending up to six months in different areas of the business, giving them the opportunity to gain a thorough understanding of the business and learn from a diverse range of staff from terminal employees to accountants. Andrew Owens, Greenergy Chief Executive, takes an active role in mentoring graduates, regularly reviewing their progress and discussing their interests and issues.

Towards the end of Jemma's placement she was offered the position of Executive Assistant to Tamara Earley, Managing Director. This diverse role saw Jemma play a key part in managing retail fuel supply contracts and developing new business leads.

Jemma was later promoted to Inland Logistics Manager, where she handled logistics for over 100 trucks and more than 260 drivers, with direct line responsibility for 15 people. Jemma's experience in many aspects of the business and the wider industry has led to her latest challenge - Trading Analyst.

Support and advice has been on-going since completing the graduate recruitment programme and Jemma has since completed a post graduate certificate in finance. She now shares her experience with new employees through her role as a mentor.
